

Prime Central London Market Report – April 2016

Our apologies to fellow Agents, but we are busy!
SALES: SALES
Pricing is key in this market. Taking into consideration the available for sale stock which is not advertised, in addition to the stock on the web portals, there is oversupply which means that this remains a buyers market. This does not mean however that the lowest price wins.
At this point in the cycle, experienced agents come into their own and through carefully crafted pricing and marketing strategies, we have been able to achieve a number of sales this month including 2 on Redburn Street in SW3, and in so doing achieving the highest price paid per square foot on the street. Understandably we are reluctant to share our process in writing (why give the competition a leg-up?) but we would be happy to walk you through how we are doing it by phone or in person.

LETTINGS:

Additional Stock putting pressure on Rents.

Void Periods are the single biggest risk to maximising rental returns.

LETTINGS

Whilst house prices have remained predominantly flat, we have seen an increase in supply of stock in the lettings market. This may well be due to vendors now placing unsold stock on the lettings market, which has led to pressure on Rents.

Certainly, we have seen a reduction above £850 of approx. 15% in the last quarter. Lower applicant requests may well be driven by businesses continuing to recruit domestic employees to avoid relocation costs and / or waiting for the result of the Brexit vote.

Our main advice to Landlords is to "Avoid the Void". A void period is where the property remains empty either as a new property to market or between tenancies. Why is this so important: a property which is being marketed at £1,000 a week is expected to generate £4,333 per month gross for a Landlord. If an offer of £850 is rejected (being £3,683 per month) and the property remains empty, the landlord loses £4,333 rather than £650 for that month. Holding out for a higher rent over 2 months produces a loss of £8,666 to the landlord vs £1,250 if the lower rent had been accepted. At the end of a 12 month period, had the landlord accepted the lower offer the gross rent would be £44,196 for 12 months vs £43,330 for 10 months (assuming the property rents at £1,000 a week at that point). The landlord would however need to deduct Council Tax and Utilities for the 2 month void period further reducing the return. The point being that is in this market all offers should be considered and rejecting what appears to be a low offer may be a false economy.

Landlords must also remember that the Lettings Market is just that – a market - which can be volatile. The Assured Shorthold Tenancy Agreement you sign may provides a 6 month break clause so, unless otherwise negotiated, a Landlord may choose to break the contract if market prices move materially in their favour. A close relationship with your lettings agent is key to keeping track of Market Pricing.
